Within the high school English courses, certain objectives or outcomes are desired. The Common Core website states that “[t]he Common Core asks students to read stories and literature, as well as more complex texts that provide facts and background knowledge in areas such as science and social studies. Students will be challenged and asked questions that push them to refer back to what they’ve read. This stresses critical-thinking, problem-solving, and analytical skills that are required for success in college, career, and life” (Core Standards). As such, this class will be focused on developing these reading, comprehension, critical-thinking, problem-solving, and analytical skills. We will engage in literary and informational texts. We will also focus on writing, speaking, listening, and language skills so that our students will become better readers, writers, listeners, and communicators.

As each student has special needs, these class will focus on differentiation so that each student receives the appropriate level of difficulty to ensure he or she is given an attainable challenge. Students will be encouraged to think like authors, to understand the urgency and exigency of communicating, and to build on their weaknesses while showcasing their strengths. We will have a number of small and large projects that reflect these growing skills. Seniors will complete a project that highlights their research skills.
